Cast of Livingstone's arm (Hammers)

In his first long journey in Central Africa, Livingstone was at Mabotsa in 1843, attacked by a lion and seriously bitten.

His left arm was broken, & from lack of proper surgical care the bone did not properly unite, but the ends lapped over each other, shortening the member.

When, in 1843, he died, & his body was brought to England, the doubts which had been raised as to its identity were put at rest by Sir William Ferguson, the celebrated surgeon, who dissected out this peculiarly healed arm bone.
